Re	esearch results overview	ppendix 1

English-language disclosure by listed companies in Japan has been rapidly increasing since the application in June 2015 of Japan's Corporate Governance Code, which contains a number of items related to English-language disclosure. In particular, JPX-Nikkei Index 400 constituent companies appear to be focusing on English-language disclosure owing to selection criteria for the index specifying that "English documents regarding the most recent earnings information are disclosed via TDnet (Company Announcements Distribution Service in English)."

In this report, we consider the extent and scope of JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents' translations of key disclosure documents, and identify recent trends by comparing the results with our findings in 2015.

1. Scope of research

We researched the English-translation of five types of document: proxy statements for annual general meetings, notices of resolutions, results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary reports), financial results (kessan tanshin), and presentation materials for earnings briefings.

Companies are also increasingly translating press releases, but we have excluded them from the scope of this research because many companies only translate certain press releases, and it is difficult to make comparisons between companies as the standards and frequency of translation vary between companies.

An overview of the results of our research into the JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents is provided at the end of this report. Comparisons are based on the results of our research in 2015, which can be found here: Englishlanguage disclosure by JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 2015.

2. Proxy statements

Rate of English translation

In 2017, 352 companies out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents translated their proxy statements, or 88.0%. This represents a significant increase from 2015, when 272 companies (68.2%) translated their proxy statements (table 1, figure 1).

Breaking this down by the proportion of foreign shareholders, 1) 82.6% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders translated their proxy statements, compared with 2) 80.0% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 85.0% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 94.3% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders. In 2015, few companies with 20% or less foreign shareholders translated their proxy notices, but the proportion doing so increased significantly in 2017, such that similar proportions of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 10-20% foreign shareholders, and 20-30% foreign shareholders translated their proxy statements. It seems that in 2015, the proportion of foreign shareholders was a key factor in most companies' decision whether or not to translate their proxy statements. whereas in 2017, this information played less of a role in companies' decision-making, amid an increasing focus on corporate governance in recent years (table 2, figure 2).

In terms of industries, 1) 92.7% of manufacturing companies, 2) 81.1% of service companies, and 3) 93.2% of financial companies translate their proxy statements. Compared with 2015, the proportion of companies translating their proxy statements has increased across all industries, although the proportion of service companies remains relatively low compared with other industries (table 3, figure 3).

Scope of English translation

We compiled data on the scope of English translation based on five categories: 1) full translation, 2) full translation except the auditor's report, 3) particulars and reference documents, 4) particulars only, and 5) other (table 4, figure 4). In 2015, more companies (44.1%) chose to create a full translation than any other category, but the proportion of companies creating a full translation fell to 37.0% in 2017. Still, the actual number of companies creating a full translation increased from 120 to 130 companies. In 2015, the second-most popular category after "full translation" was "particulars and reference documents" with 34.9% of companies choosing to translate these documents, but in 2017, the proportion of companies translating these documents increased to 47.0%, meaning "particulars and reference documents" overtook "full translation" to become the most popular category. Although there was a decline in the proportion of companies creating a full translation, it appears that many of the 80 companies opting to translate their proxy statements for the first time in 2017 decided to translate the particulars and reference documents. We will be looking closely at whether these companies move to a full translation in future.

Maps and instructions regarding the exercise of voting rights

Japanese versions of proxy statements usually have a map at the end that shows the vicinity of the meeting venue, but only 5.1% of companies with English translations have maps in English versions of proxy statements, down from 8.3% in 2015. Furthermore, five of these companies have written descriptions of routes from the closest station instead of maps in English versions, but we have included them under "with translation" (table 5, figure 5).

An increasing number of companies include a page with an explanation of how to exercise voting rights in writing and online in Japanese versions of their proxy statements. Of companies with English translations, 50.1% translated these pages, slightly up from 47.8% in 2015. Furthermore, we have only included companies that include these instructions as a separate page, and have not included those where the explanation is a few lines in the particulars (table 5, figure 5).

3. Notices of resolutions

Rate of English translation

Out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 192 companies translate their notices of resolutions, or 48.0%. This marks a small increase from 46.6% in 2015, but the proportion remains lower than the proportion of companies that translate their proxy statements. Furthermore, instead of translating this information as a notice of resolutions, ten companies posted this information online as reports of general meetings on the general meeting of shareholders section of their investor relations websites, but as the content is virtually the same as a notice of resolutions except for the method of payment of dividends, etc., we have counted such companies as translating their notices of resolutions (table 6, figure 6).

The proportion of companies translating notices of resolutions is higher for companies with a higher proportion of foreign shareholders, with 1) 30.4% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 2) 21.3% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 42.5% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 65.7% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating notices of resolutions (table 7, figure 7).

In terms of industries, 1) 56.3% of manufacturing companies, 2) 37.2% of service companies, and 3) 52.3% of financial companies translate their notices of resolutions (table 8, figure 8).

4. Results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary reports)

Rate of English translation

Out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 97 companies translate extraordinary reports regarding the results of the exercise of voting rights, or 24.3%, a significant increase from 2015 when 12.5% of companies translated these documents (table 9, figure 9).

Instead of translating this information as an extraordinary report, some companies presented this information as a table on the general meeting of shareholders section of their investor relations website showing the approval rate and results of resolutions for each proposal (MinebeaMitsumi Inc. and SoftBank Group Corp.). We have counted these companies as translating the results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary report).

Looking at the proportion of companies translating extraordinary reports regarding the results of the exercise of voting rights by the proportion of foreign shareholders, 1) 8.7% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders translated these documents, 2) 10.7% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 22.8% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 33.1% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders. There has thus been a significant increase in the proportion of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating these documents, with one in three companies translating these documents in 2017 (table 10, figure 10).

In terms of industries, 1) 28.6% of manufacturing companies, 2) 14.6% of service companies, and 3) 40.9% of financial companies translate the results of the exercise of voting rights. As in 2015, the proportion of companies in the financial industry providing translations is higher than that of other industries (table 11, figure 11).

5. Financial results (kessan tanshin)

Rate of English translation

Out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 329 companies translate their financial results (kessan tanshin), or 82.3%, a small increase from 81.0% in 2015. In 2015, more companies translated their financial results than any other type of disclosure document, but in 2017, more companies translated their proxy statement (88.0%) (table 12, figure 12 and table 1, figure 1).

The Tokyo Stock Exchange has been providing a "Company Announcements Distribution Service in English" since 2011, but we have not counted use of this service as having a translation of financial results because English-language versions created with this service are presented as a list of numbers, etc. from the summary information, and are more difficult to read than the original summary information.

As in 2015, the proportion of companies translating financial results is higher for companies with a higher proportion of foreign shareholders, with 1) 60.9% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 2) 72.0% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 82.7% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 89.1% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating financial results (table 13, figure 13).

In terms of industries, 1) 87.0% of manufacturing companies, 2) 75.6% of service companies, and 3) 86.4% of financial companies translate their financial results. The proportion of companies translating their financial results in the financial industry increased significantly in 2017, approaching a level similar to that of the manufacturing industry (table 14, figure 14).

Frequency of translation

We researched the frequency of translation of financial results based on four categories: 1) quarterly, 2) year-end and first half, 3) year-end only, and 4) from the first quarter to the third quarter only (table 15, figure 15). Of 329 companies providing English translations of their financial results, almost all (322 companies or 97.6%) do so on a quarterly basis, as in 2015.

Scope of English translation

We researched the scope of English translation of year-end financial results based on five categories: 1) full translation, 2) summary information and financial statements, 3) financial statements only, 4) summary information only, and 5) other (table 16, graph 16). One company created translations for each quarter except year-end (Stanley Electric Co., Ltd.), leaving us with 328 companies to analyze. Of these 328 companies, about half (160; 48.8%) provide a full translation. There are a certain number of companies that provide translations of summary information and financial statements, financial statements only, or summary information only, although the proportion of companies was less than 10% for each of these categories. Many companies (129; 39.3%) are classed as "other," but classification is difficult owing to companies that omit the notes to financial statements but not segment information.

There are also many companies that provide a different scope of translation for year-end and quarterly financial results, such as companies that provide a full translation at year-end, but only a partial translation for quarterly releases. As a result, we also looked at the scope of English translation for quarterly financial results based on the same five categories: 1) full translation, 2) summary information and financial statements, 3) financial statements only, 4) summary information only, and 5) other (table 17, figure 17). Of the 327 companies providing English translations of quarterly financial results, 183 companies (56.0%) provided full translations, significantly higher than the proportion for year-end financial results (48.8%). This may be partly due to the fact that companies are increasingly reducing the amount of Japanese text in quarterly financial results, meaning less work is required to create English translations.

6. Presentation materials for earnings briefings

Rate of English translation

Out of all 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 329 companies translate presentation materials for earnings briefings, or 82.3%. Like proxy statements (88.0%) and financial results (82.3%), a high proportion of companies translate this type of document (table 18, figure 18).

The proportion of companies translating presentation materials is higher for companies with a higher proportion of foreign shareholders, with 1) 65.2% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 2) 81.3% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 78.7% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 87.4% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating presentation materials (table 19, figure 19).

In terms of industries, 1) 82.8% of manufacturing companies, 2) 79.4% of service companies, and 3) 93.2% of financial companies translate presentation materials. The proportion of financial companies translating these materials was already high in 2015, but has still increased significantly in 2017 (table 20, figure 20).

Frequency of translation

We researched the frequency of translation of presentation materials for earnings briefings based on three categories, 1) quarterly, 2) year-end and first half, and 3) year-end only. Of 329 companies providing English translations, 246 (74.8%) do so on a quarterly basis (table 21, figure 21). Additionally, 75 companies provide Japanese-language presentation materials twice yearly, at year-end and the end of the first half, and of these 72 companies (96%) provide English translations twice yearly, while only three companies (4%) provide translations only at year-end.

7. Duplication of information between documents and scope of disclosure

There is some duplication of content between the business report and financial statements in proxy statements for annual general meetings and financial results (kessan tanshin), so some companies translate the financial results, which are disclosed sooner and are focused on more by investors, and omit the business report and financial statements in proxy statements. In fact, SEC regulations require foreign companies listed in the US to translate information provided to shareholders into English and file it with EDGAR, but some Japanese companies listed in the US omit the translation of the business report, perhaps because the information is the same as that in financial results. Of the 165 companies that only translate the particulars and reference documents for proxy statements, 124 (75.2%) translate their financial results, and some of these may consider the translation of financial results as a replacement for the translation of the business report and financial statements.

Still, translating financial results does not cover all the important information in the business report and financial statements because the business report contains important information that is not usually included in financial results, such as information on officers, shareholders, subsidiaries, borrowing, and shares, and the notes to financial statements in financial results often have less information than notes to financial statements covered by the Companies Act. In recent years, companies have also been reducing the information in financial results in order to meet the demand for early disclosure, creating a more significant difference in the information contained in the financial results and the business report and financial statements. As a result, companies must check that there are no omissions in the scope of information covered by translations of proxy statements and financial results.

8. English translation of each type of document

If we arrange the five types of disclosure document in order of the proportion of companies translating them into English, the order would be as follows: 1) proxy statements 88.0%, 2) and 3) financial results (kessan tanshin) and earnings briefing and presentation materials, 82.3% each, 4) notices of resolutions, 48.0%, and 5) results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary reports), 24.3% (table 22, figure 22). Compared with 2015, it appears companies' focus has shifted from financial results and presentation materials, which formerly played a central role in companies' investor relations activities, to more corporate governancerelated documents, with significant increases of 19.8% and 11.8% in the proportion of companies translating their proxy statements and results of the exercise of voting rights, respectively.

If we compare the English translation of different types of disclosure document by the proportion of foreign shareholders, we see that the proportion of companies creating translations is higher for companies with more foreign shareholders, for all types of disclosure document. We find a difference of 11.7pp in the proportion of companies translating their proxy statements between companies with a high proportion of foreign shareholders and companies with a low proportion of foreign shareholders. This is the smallest difference between companies with high and low proportions of foreign shareholders for any of the different types of disclosure document, and is notable for the fact that it has narrowed significantly from 2015, when the difference was 46.6pp. It appears this change has been partly driven by companies' recognition of the necessity of providing information on proposals directly to investors overseas, in addition to market participants' increasing focus on corporate governance in recent years and shareholder voting recommendations from voting service providers.

Financial results and presentation materials complement each other as highly time-sensitive disclosure documents, and the same proportion of the 400 companies we looked at translated each of these types of document (82.3%). Comparing these two types of document by the proportion of foreign shareholders, however, we find that many companies with less than 20% foreign shareholders translate their presentation materials, whereas more companies with more than 20% foreign shareholders translate their financial results. It appears companies with a relatively low proportion of foreign shareholders are focusing more on their presentation materials, perhaps because they want to use their translations to explain their business models, growth strategies, etc. to overseas investors, as this information is difficult to include in financial results releases.

If we compare the English of different types of disclosure document by the three types of industry classification (manufacturing, service, and financial), we see that the average proportion of companies providing translations across these five types of document is highest in the financial industry (73.2%), followed by the manufacturing industry (69.5%), then the service industry (57.6%). Companies in the financial industry may be actively focusing on translations of disclosure documents because they themselves are often investors, and it is particularly notable that the proportion of companies translating extraordinary reports on the results of the exercise of voting rights is high, whereas it is low in other industries. The proportion of companies in the manufacturing industry providing translations is relatively high compared with the service industry. This may be because many Japanese manufacturing companies operate businesses overseas and there is little resistance to English-language disclosure, whereas many companies in the service industry only operate domestic businesses, and there is no department or manager responsible for English language disclosure, meaning there tend to be greater barriers to English-language disclosure (table 24, figure 24).

Industry	Proxy statement	Notice of resolutions	Results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary report)	Financial results	Earnings briefing presentation materials
1) Manufacturing (192 companies)	178 (92.7%)	108 (56.3%)	55 (28.6%)	167 (87.0%)	159 (82.8%)
2) Service (164 companies)	133 (81.1%)	61 (37.2%)	24 (14.6%)	124 (75.6%)	129 (79.4%)
3) Financial (44 companies)	41 (93.2%)	23 (52.3%)	18 (40.9%)	38 (86.4%)	41 (93.2%)
