English-language disclosure by listed companies in Japan has been rapidly increasing since the application in June 2015 of Japan’s Corporate Governance Code, which contains a number of items related to English-language disclosure. In particular, JPX-Nikkei Index 400 constituent companies appear to be focusing on English-language disclosure owing to selection criteria for the index specifying that “English documents regarding the most recent earnings information are disclosed via TDnet (Company Announcements Distribution Service in English).”

In this report, we consider the extent and scope of JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents’ translations of key disclosure documents from 2019, and identify recent trends by comparing the results with our findings in 2015 and 2017.

1. Scope of research

We researched the English-translation of five types of document: proxy statements for annual general meetings, notices of resolutions, results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary reports), financial results (kessan tanshin), and presentation materials for earnings briefings.

Companies are also increasingly translating press releases, but we have excluded them from the scope of this research because many companies only translate certain press releases, and it is difficult to make comparisons between companies as the standards and frequency of translation vary between companies.

An overview of the results of our research into the JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents is provided at the end of this report. Comparisons are based on the results of our research in 2015 and 2017, which can be found here: English-language disclosure by JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 2015, English-language disclosure by JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 2015.

2. Proxy statements

Rate of English translation

In 2019, 367 companies out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents translated their proxy statements, or 91.8% (table 1, figure 1). This represents an increase of nearly 4% from 2017, when 352 companies (88.0%) translated their proxy statements, bringing the proportion of companies that translate their proxy statements to over 90%.

Breaking this down by the proportion of foreign shareholders, 1) 81.8% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders translated their proxy statements, compared with 2) 88.6% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 87.4% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 97.1% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders (table 2, figure 2). Compared with 2017, companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders showed the greatest amount of proportional growth with an increase of 8.6%, a significant difference from companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders. About 80% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, about 90% of companies with 10-30% foreign shareholders, and nearly 100% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translate their proxy statements, and in 2019, we can see a correlation between the proportion of foreign shareholders and the proportion of companies that translate their proxy statements, which seems to indicate that the practice of translating proxy statements is becoming more established.

In terms of industries, 1) 96.9% of manufacturing companies, 2) 84.7% of service companies, and 3) 100.0% of financial companies translate their proxy statements. Compared with 2017, the proportion of companies translating their proxy statements has increased across all industries. In particular, the proportion of financial companies has reached 100% for the first time since the initiation of this research, but it should be noted that in 2019, the financial industry constitutes a significantly smaller proportion of the JPX-Nikkei 400 when compared to 2017 (table 3, figure 3).

Scope of English translation

We compiled data on the scope of English translation based on five categories: 1) full translation, 2) full translation except the auditor’s report, 3) particulars and reference documents, 4) particulars only, and 5) other (table 4, figure 4). In 2019, the proportion of companies that chose to translate their particulars and reference documents, which increased sharply from 2015 to 2017, dropped 3.4% from 2017, while there has been a slight increase in the proportion of companies creating a full translation (up 1.1%) and other (up 2.1%). We can imagine that a number of companies that translated their particulars and reference documents revised their process and moved to creating a full translation or other. Although the average proportion of the 400 constituent companies that translate their proxy statements exceeded 90%, the proportion of companies that create a full translation has still decreased 6% from 2015, which remains the highest figure since the initiation of this research. If the translation of proxy statements is expanded in the future, there may also be an expansion of the scope of English translations, and we will be looking closely to see whether the proportion of companies creating a full translation will exceed the level found in 2015.

Maps and instructions regarding the exercise of voting rights

Japanese versions of proxy statements usually have a map at the end that shows the vicinity of the meeting venue, but only 3.5% of companies with English translations have maps in English versions of proxy statements, continuing to decrease from 2015 (table 5, figure 5). Furthermore, five of these companies have written descriptions of routes from the closest station instead of maps in English versions, but we have included them under “with translation.”

An increasing number of companies include a page with an explanation of how to exercise voting rights in writing and online in Japanese versions of their proxy statements. Of companies with English translations, 51.5% translated these pages, slightly up from 50.0% in 2017 (table 5, figure 5). Furthermore, we have only included companies that include these instructions as a separate page, and have not included those where the explanation is a few lines in the particulars.

3. Notices of resolutions

Rate of English translation

Out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 206 companies translate their notices of resolutions, or 51.5%. This marks an increase of 3.5% from 48.0% in 2017, but the proportion remains lower than the proportion of companies that translate their proxy statements. Furthermore, instead of translating this information as a notice of resolutions, 11 companies posted this information online as reports of general meetings on the general meeting of shareholders section of their investor relations websites, but as the content is virtually the same as a notice of resolutions except for the method of payment of dividends, etc., we have counted such companies as translating their notices of resolutions (table 6, figure 6).

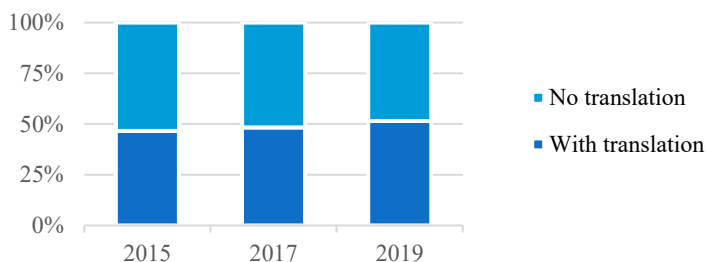

The proportion of companies translating notices of resolutions is higher for companies with a higher proportion of foreign shareholders, with 1) 18.2% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 2) 32.9% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 43.0% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 68.6% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating notices of resolutions (table 7, figure 7).

In terms of industries, 1) 60.3% of manufacturing companies, 2) 38.1% of service companies, and 3) 73.3% of financial companies translate their notices of resolutions (table 8, figure 8).

4. Results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary reports)

Rate of English translation

Out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 111 companies translate extraordinary reports regarding the results of the exercise of voting rights, or 27.8%, an increase of 3.5% from 2017 (table 9, figure 9).

Instead of translating this information as an extraordinary report, some companies presented this information as a table on the general meeting of shareholders section of their investor relations website showing the approval rate and results of resolutions for each proposal (MinebeaMitsumi Inc. and SoftBank Group Corp.). We have counted these companies as translating the results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary report).

Looking at the proportion of companies translating extraordinary reports regarding the results of the exercise of voting rights by the proportion of foreign shareholders, 1) 18.2% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders translated these documents, 2) 15.2% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 25.9% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 35.4% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders. There has thus been a significant increase in the proportion of companies with up to 20% foreign shareholders translating these documents, and the gap is narrowing between these companies and the proportion of companies that translate these documents as a result of differences in the proportion of foreign shareholders (table 10, figure 10).

In terms of industries, 1) 33.0% of manufacturing companies, 2) 17.0% of service companies, and 3) 56.7% of financial companies translate the results of the exercise of voting rights. Since 2015, the proportion of companies in the financial industry providing translations has remained consistently higher than that of other industries, and has exceeded 50% for the first time (table 11, figure 11).

5. Financial results (kessan tanshin)

Rate of English translation

Out of 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 347 companies translate their financial results (kessan tanshin), or 86.8%, an increase of 4.5% from 82.3% in 2017. In 2015, more companies translated their financial results than any other type of document, but in 2019, more companies translated their proxy statement (91.8%), continuing the trend from 2017 (table 12, figure 12 and table 1, figure 1).

The Tokyo Stock Exchange has been providing a “Company Announcements Distribution Service in English” since 2011, but we have not counted use of this service as having a translation of financial results because English-language versions created with this service are presented as a list of numbers, etc. from the summary information, and are more difficult to read than the original summary information.

As in 2017, the proportion of companies translating financial results is higher for companies with a higher proportion of foreign shareholders, with 1) 72.7% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 2) 79.7% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 85.9% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 91.4% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating financial results, but there has been a significant increase in the proportion of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders translating financial results, which has narrowed the gap between these companies and the proportion of companies that translate their financial results as a result of differences in the proportion of foreign shareholders (table 13, figure 13).

In terms of industries, 1) 91.2% of manufacturing companies, 2) 81.3% of service companies, and 3) 90.0% of financial companies translate their financial results. Although the proportions of companies translating their financial results in the service industry has increased from 2017, since 2015, this figure has continued to be lower than that of other industries (table 14, figure 14).

Frequency of translation

We researched the frequency of translation of financial results based on four categories: 1) quarterly, 2) year-end and first half, 3) year-end only, and 4) from the first quarter to the third quarter only (table 15, figure 15). Of 347 companies providing English translations of their financial results, almost all (341 companies or 98.3%) do so on a quarterly basis, which has remained consistent since the initiation of this research in 2015.

Scope of English translation

We researched the scope of English translation of year-end financial results based on five categories: 1) full translation, 2) summary information and financial statements, 3) financial statements only, 4) summary information only, and 5) other (table 16, graph 16). One company created translations for each quarter except year-end (Stanley Electric Co., Ltd.), leaving us with 346 companies to analyze. Of these 346 companies, 54.6% (189 companies) provide a full translation, a significant increase from 48.8% in 2017. There are a certain number of companies that provide translations of summary information and financial statements, or summary information only, although the proportion of companies was around 5% for each of these categories. The number of companies that translate financial statements only was already small in 2015 and 2017, but decreased even further to less than 1% in 2019. Many companies (119; 34.4%) are classed as “other,” but classification is difficult owing to companies’ flexible approach to translation, such as companies that only omit qualitative information, and companies that omit the notes to financial statements but not segment information.

There are also many companies that provide a different scope of translation for year-end and quarterly financial results, such as companies that provide a full translation at year-end, but only a partial translation for quarterly releases. As a result, we also looked at the scope of English translation for quarterly financial results based on the same five categories: 1) full translation, 2) summary information and financial statements, 3) financial statements only, 4) summary information only, and 5) other (table 17, figure 17). Of the 342 companies providing English translations of quarterly financial results, 207 companies (60.5%) provided full translations, exceeding 60% for the first time. This may be partly due to the fact that companies are increasingly reducing the amount of information included in Japanese text in quarterly financial results, meaning less work is required to create English versions.

6. Presentation materials for earnings briefings

Rate of English translation

Out of all 400 JPX-Nikkei 400 constituents, 355 companies translate presentation materials for earnings briefings, or 88.8%. Like proxy statements (91.8%) and financial results (86.8%), a high proportion of companies translate this type of document (table 18, figure 18).

The proportion of companies translating presentation materials is still higher for companies with a higher proportion of foreign shareholders, with 1) 81.8% of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders, 2) 86.1% of companies with 10-20% foreign shareholders, 3) 88.1% of companies with 20-30% foreign shareholders, and 4) 90.9% of companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translating presentation materials. However, there has been a significant increase in the proportion of companies with up to 10% foreign shareholders translating presentation materials, which has narrowed the gap between these companies and the proportion of companies that translate their presentation materials as a result of differences in the proportion of foreign shareholders (table 19, figure 19).

In terms of industries, 1) 90.7% of manufacturing companies, 2) 84.7% of service companies, and 3) 100% of financial companies translate presentation materials. The proportion of financial companies translating these materials has been consistently high, and has reached 100% in 2019 (table 20, figure 20).

Frequency of translation

We researched the frequency of translation of presentation materials for earnings briefings based on three categories, 1) quarterly, 2) year-end and first half, and 3) year-end only. Of 355 companies providing English translations, 290 (81.7%) do so on a quarterly basis (table 21, figure 21). The proportion of companies providing translations on a quarterly basis has increased by 13.4% in the four years leading up to 2019, from 68.3% in 2015, as the practice of providing translations on a quarterly basis is becoming more established. Additionally, 63 companies provide Japanese-language presentation materials twice yearly, at year-end and the end of the first half, and of these 59 companies (93.7%) provide English translations twice yearly, while only three companies (4.7%) provide translations only at year-end. One company provides Japanese-language presentation materials twice yearly, at year-end and the end of the first half, but provides translations on a quarterly basis (Sotetsu Holdings, Inc.).

7. Duplication of information between documents and scope of disclosure

There is some duplication of content between the business report and financial statements in proxy statements for annual general meetings and financial results (kessan tanshin). As such, some companies translate the financial results, which are disclosed sooner and are focused on more by investors, and omit the business report and financial statements in proxy statements. In fact, SEC regulations require foreign companies listed in the US to translate information provided to shareholders into English and file it with EDGAR, but some Japanese companies listed in the US omit the translation of the business report, perhaps because the information is the same as that in financial results. Of the 160 companies that only translate the particulars and reference documents for proxy statements, 126 (78.8%) translate their financial results, and some of these may consider the translation of financial results as a replacement for the translation of the business report and financial statements.

Still, translating financial results does not cover all the important information in the business report and financial statements because the business report contains important information that is not usually included in financial results, such as information on officers, shareholders, subsidiaries, borrowing, shares, and corporate governance, and the notes to financial statements in financial results often have less information than notes to financial statements covered by the Companies Act. In recent years, companies have also been reducing the information in financial results in order to meet the demand for early disclosure, creating a more significant difference in the information contained in the financial results and the business report and financial statements. As a result, companies must check that there are no omissions in the scope of information covered by translations of proxy statements and financial results.

8. English translation of each type of document

If we arrange the five types of disclosure document in order of the proportion of companies translating them into English, the order would be as follows: 1) proxy statements, 91.8%, 2) presentation materials for earnings briefings, 88.8%, 3) financial results (kessan tanshin), 86.8%, 4) notices of resolutions, 51.5%, and 5) results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary reports), 27.8% (table 22, figure 22). Compared with 2017, the proportion of companies translating their financial results and presentation materials approached that of proxy statements, increasing by 4.5% and 6.5%, respectively, and it appears that these disclosure documents may reach the same level as proxy statements in future research. In addition, the translation of all types of disclosures documents increased from 2017.

Table 22 English translation by type of disclosure document

1) Proxy statement	272	(68.2%)	352	(88.0%)	367	(91.8%)
2) Notice of resolutions	186	(46.6%)	192	(48.0%)	206	(51.5%)
3) Results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary report)	50	(12.5%)	97	(24.3%)	111	(27.8%)
4) Financial results	323	(81.0%)	329	(82.3%)	347	(86.8%)
5) Presentation materials for earnings briefings	312	(78.2%)	329	(82.3%)	355	(88.8%)

If we compare the English translation of different types of disclosure document by the proportion of foreign shareholders, we see that the proportion of companies creating translations is higher for companies with more foreign shareholders, for all types of disclosure document. We find a difference of 9.1 percentage points in the proportion of companies translating their presentation materials between companies with a high proportion of foreign shareholders and companies with a low proportion of foreign shareholders. This is the smallest difference between companies with high and low proportions of foreign shareholders for any of the different types of disclosure document. Although the proportion of companies translating their proxy statements was the smallest in 2017 (11.7%), we can see that the translation of presentation materials was more common than that of proxy statements in companies with a low proportion of foreign shareholders in 2019. It appears that, for companies with a relatively low proportion of foreign shareholders, this may be the result of prioritizing increased recognition by foreign investors and explanations of their business models, etc., over promoting the exercise of voting rights and disclosing information related to governance.

Financial results and presentation materials complement each other as highly time-sensitive disclosure documents, and a high proportion of the 400 companies we looked at translated each of these types of document (86.8% and 88.8%, respectively). Comparing these two types of document by the proportion of foreign shareholders, however, we find that many companies with less than 30% foreign shareholders translate their presentation materials, whereas more companies with more than 30% foreign shareholders translate their financial results. It appears companies with a relatively low proportion of foreign shareholders are focusing more on their presentation materials, perhaps because they want to use their translations to explain their business models, growth strategies, etc. to overseas investors, as this information, similar to the comparison of proxy statements noted above, is difficult to include in financial results releases.

Still, from the perspective of an overseas investor, it seems that there would be a need to understand the basic financial information of the company in an English translation of the financial results before exploring the company’s thought process in presentation materials that the company has decided to provide at their own discretion.

Table 23 English translation by proportion of foreign shareholders

Proportion of foreign shareholders	Proxy statement	Notice of resolutions	Results of the exercise of voting rights (extraordinary report)	Financial results	Earnings briefing presentation materials
1) Up to 10% (11 companies)	9 (81.8%)	2 (18.2%)	2 (18.2%)	8 (72.7%)	9 (81.8%)
2) 10-20% (79 companies)	70 (88.6%)	26 (32.9%)	12 (15.2%)	63 (79.7%)	68 (86.1%)
3) 20-30% (135 companies)	118 (87.4%)	58 (43.0%)	35 (25.9%)	116 (85.9%)	119 (88.1%)
4) More than 30% (175 companies)	170 (97.1%)	120 (68.6%)	62 (35.4%)	160 (91.4%)	159 (90.9%)
Total	367 (91.8%)	206 (51.5%)	111 (27.8%)	347 (86.8%)	355 (88.8%)

If we compare the English translation of the five types of disclosure documents by the three types of industries (manufacturing, service, and financial), we see that the average proportion of companies providing translations across these documents is highest in the financial industry (84.0%), followed by the manufacturing industry (74.4%), then the service industry (61.2%). Companies in the financial industry may be actively focusing on translations of disclosure documents because they themselves are often investors, and it is particularly notable that the proportion of companies translating extraordinary reports on the results of the exercise of voting rights is high, whereas it is low in other industries. The proportion of companies in the manufacturing industry providing translations is relatively high compared with the service industry. This may be because many Japanese manufacturing companies operate businesses overseas and there is little resistance to English-language disclosure, whereas many companies in the service industry only operate domestic businesses, and there is no department or manager responsible for English language disclosure, meaning there tend to be greater barriers to English-language disclosure (table 24, figure 24).
